war. When has book came down he didn't build any railroads or send anybody to Congress, and of course, as our man. But time rolls on, Col. Ben finds the position rather pleasant and now has the unblushing effrontery to tell the "boys" they will have to wait a little longer or take something else, but they "can't see it." The farmers along the route of the narrow gauge don't know whether to plant any corn or not as it may be necessary for the Col. to build a "broad gauge" this time in order to have Wetzel solid, and then the "boys" who were promised positions before don't know whether to arrange to make an honest living in their usual avocations, or fill most of the State offices and go to Congress too.

If you can get some good lawyer to answer the following questions and take his pay in "sang," have him to do so and send bill to "Office Seeker" and somebody will get it.

2d. Is there any kind of legal proceed-ing by which he can be compelled-to ful-fill his promises to the "boys," to give them all the offices they want?

We think our County Court would have jurisdiction as they can do almost anything except "aquash indictments." If there should be any demurrers to over-THE schools of New York city are suffering seriously from the long misman-agement of the city affairs. The city funds having been squandered and debt nereased, it has been obliged to keep its schools on short allowance, till now the natural growth of the population has overcrowded the accommodations in many localities. Several hundred more odstions in pupils are received in some buildings than there is legitimate room for, and the average air space runs down to 50 cubic feet per person in many rooms, whereas 300 feet is the proper allowance. Ventilation and all the savitary condi-tions are equally neglected. The papers have stirred up the school board, who in turn may succeed in getting a larger appropriation under the stress of popular cently gave a specimen of Hindu poetry addressed to the Prince of Wales in the rather unlikely character of a divinity, which seemed to us somewhat demonstrative in style; but it was tame and temperate beside other odes from the same region since published in the English papers. It is a natural suggestion that he wicked Hindus are making game of Wales, as they have certainly made puns on him in their inscriptions ("Greatest of fishes—whales; greatest of princes— Wales," as one of them reads); when one reads such solemn sarcasus as these:

This is from a Sanskrit poem, written for such as the company reserves can be adjusted on the same prize was more flowery, and partly in the style of the Song of Solomon, representing Albert Edward as having the firmament for his throne and the sam for his torch; being the asylum of the world, the lord of time, the king of kings, with the stars for his army and the sky his tent, and subsequently picturing the same sky as a bower, "the blossoms in which are his extreme politeness and affability. Should he frown, the clouds would rain fire; should he smile, even the hard horn-branches of the swift-footed antelope would blossom and bud." This is pretty tough for the prime's digestion, for he is credited with a good deal of "horse sense," and is said to have thought that the adulatory congratulations on his recovery from typhus, some years ago, were a trifte worse than the original malady, and more weakening, if indulged in. Still, he may have associated sufficiently, by this time, with the maharajahs, nawabs, begums, etc., who feed on such stuff from their babyhood, to have become hardened to it. To slightly change the subject—it is not surprising that people who are so reckless with their own languages should use English quite regardless of expense, and of the said to the was it is used by the size the said to the contractor of the work, in which mortar of any kind is to be used, is to be carried on during the period of frost.

He begins: "Honored and Reverend Madam: With the most profound respect, I come before you with the pen, to prostrate myself at your ladyship's footstool, as a humble petitioner for your bountful charitles and long-suffering. Your countenance is like the moon when she walks in brightness, wherefore I do not prognosticate defeat—for the quality of merey is not strained." OUR WETZEL CORRESPONDENCE.

The Question of Railroads, Congressional Nominations and State Offices all Mixed Up. New Martinsville, W. Va., March 13, 1876.

Editors Intelligencer:

A difficult question has arisen here among our Democratic friends, and as the Register lolks are supposed to be too busy taking care of the "Berkshire bulls" and "Durham boars" shortly to be distributed amongst the faithful to pay much attention to minor matters, we thought it best to refer to you. The case is about as follows: In the canvass for the Congressional nomination two years ago, Col. Ben. was being rather hard pressed, and it seemed necessary that Wetzel should be solid; but how to arrange it was the question. We have no raifroad in this part of the county, and after due consideration Col. Ben. thought he would build one up Fishing Creek—only a "narrow gauge" it is true, but you know ever the first that is better than nothing. But "Hans" Good was coming down and he might "see" the Colonel's "narrow gauge" and "go" a broad gauge "better," and something else must be done. Let us premise by the way that we have some very talented men here, "qualified to fill any position sir." You may have heard a great of them for though they expeared.

ly let their light shine only at home, yet the refulgence sometimes extends to the State Capital. "Col. Ben," soon found out how it was, and although sorry that his arrangements were such that he couldn't give way that time, yet nothing could be easier than to promise them either the next Congressional nomination, or a position on the State ticket.

"This did the work and it was easier under this arrangement to raise Wilson delegates than it would have been to raise a company of Brigadiers during the last war. When "Hans Good" came down he didn't build any railroads or send anybody to Congress, and of course, as MARTIN'S FERRY ITEMS.—Officers Bo-gard and St. Myers of your city arrested on the train here a Mr. Mooney, who, ro-port says, has stolen quite a lot of har ness hereabouts. Mr. W. D. Hawells, editor of the Atlantic Manhity, and author of several volums of choice literature, has presented to the Library Association here a full set of his works, beautifully bound in blue and gold.

Rev. H. B. Edwards, of the M. E. Church, left here this morning to attend the Pittsburgh Conference which meets at Canton, Ohio, March 15th. A large number of our people desire Mr. Edwards' return, but nothing is known whether he will come back or not.

The office of the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad is the scene of much activity just now by the appearance of quite a number of contractors and others interested in the road. The notice to contractors published in the eastern and western papers has brought hundreds of western papers has brought hundreds of contractors published in the eastern and western papers has brought hundreds of letters in reply asking for specifications for the different parts of the work, and we look forward now to the time when workmen will be busy at work "all along the line." It is strange now how many people here are of the opinion that the road will eventually be built, while for two years but one man in the town had an idea that it would, that man was the indefatigable worker and its President, Joel Wood.
